

House GOPers are lining up to praise President Bush for commuting the sentences of two Border Patrol agents who received heavy sentences after shooting a pot smuggler in the bottocks.

Missouri Republican Rep. Roy Blunt said: "While these two men were not pardoned as many believe they should have been, I am glad their unnecessarily harsh and simply unnecessary sentences were at the very least commuted."

Rep. Steve King (R-Ia.) said Bush "responded to the calls for compassion that came from across the country and made the right decision in granting these two men commutations."

Rep. John Campbell (R-Ca.): "This entire situation has taken an enormous toll on these men and their families, and I am happy to see them reunited, so they can continue on with their lives."
