

Quite often you hear Democratic politicians in particular and liberals generally decry the fact that they believe the rich aren't paying their "fair share" of taxes. Set aside the fact that the richest 5 percent of Americans pay half the income taxes in the country or that the wealthiest 50 percent...

Quite often you hear Democratic politicians in particular and liberals generally decry the fact that they believe the rich aren't paying their "fair share" of taxes.

Set aside the fact that the richest 5 percent of Americans pay half the income taxes in the country or that the wealthiest 50 percent pay 90 percent of income taxes collected. It seems that American families of very modest means are considered to be "the rich" by envious politicians looking for more revenue for their latest schemes.

Of course, those who believe Americans aren't paying enough in taxes could voluntarily pay more. The IRS will gladly accept voluntary tax donations, but few people actually avail themselves of the opportunity to practice what they preach. Last year, only $2.6 million in voluntary donations to Uncle Sam were collected.

Last week, Rep. John Campbell, a California Republican, introduced the "Put Your Money Where Your Mouth Is Act," which would amend the tax code to put a new line on IRS tax forms where people could fill out how much more they would like to pay in taxes.

Said Campbell: "It's a great injustice that citizens wishing to fulfill their dream of paying more taxes cannot simply check a box on their 1040 form to make a donation." He told the Wall Street Journal that he introduced his bill to give liberals a chance to ease their consciences without raising taxes on other Americans who already feel overtaxed.

Today, April 15, is the day income taxes are due. For those of you who think that some Americans aren't paying enough in taxes, go ahead and pay more than you owe.

Campbell's bill is a good idea to make it easier for people who think taxes aren't high enough to put more of their money where their mouth is.