

Today, U.S. Rep. John Campbell, chairman of the Budget and Spending Taskforce for the conservative Republican Study Committee, made the following statement regarding the emergency supplemental appropriations bill considered today in the House of Representatives: “The emergency war funding bill we ...

Today, U.S. Rep. John Campbell, chairman of the Budget and Spending Taskforce for the conservative Republican Study Committee, made the following statement regarding the emergency supplemental appropriations bill considered today in the House of Representatives:

“The emergency war funding bill we are considering today, contains withdrawal provisions that will endanger our troops in Iraq and further jeopardize the success of the operation. These provisions are so ill-advised that the only way they could get enough votes to pass the bill was to load it with $20 billion in spending unrelated to the war effort, and much of this spending is on frivolous pork projects.

“Since taking the majority, the Democratic caucus has shown their commitment to one thing above all else – spending more of the taxpayers money without regard for the consequences. Today, they have taken things to a new low by putting our troops and our national security in danger.

“If the Democrats can’t get enough support to pass their flawed military strategy, they shouldn’t be collecting support by handing out billions of dollars for things like peanut storage programs, spinach farmers, salmon fishermen, and dairy subsidies.”

Rep. Campbell has also been covering this issue on the Green Eyeshade Blog <http://greeneyeshade.townhall.com/blog>

on Townhall.com