

Today, the U.S. House of Representatives passed the Budget Resolution for Fiscal Year 2007. U.S. Rep. John Campbell (R-Irvine) made the following statement: "By passing this budget we have turned the corner in the effort to control spending, and put ourselves back on to the road to fiscal responsibi..."

Today, the U.S. House of Representatives passed the Budget Resolution for Fiscal Year 2007. U.S. Rep. John Campbell (R-Irvine) made the following statement: "By passing this budget we have turned the corner in the effort to control spending, and put ourselves back on to the road to fiscal responsibility. It returns the government's growth rate to a reasonable level: below the rate at which revenues are increasing and below the growth in population plus inflation."

"In the years following the Republican tax cuts, we have seen a dramatic increase in government revenues as our economy has expanded. By ensuring we keep these policies in place while controlling spending simultaneously, we will be able to reduce the deficit over time."

"Additionally, the process reforms included in the budget, as well as other reforms expected to come up this year, will help control spending by changing the way Washington works."

"This year's budget is a good one, not a perfect one. My colleagues in the Republican Study Committee (RSC) offered an alternative proposal which would have gone further to control discretionary spending, reform entitlements, and improve the budget process. Although I would have liked to see the RSC's budget approved, the House passed budget begins to move us in the direction of fiscal responsibility."