

Washington, DC - Today, U.S. Rep. John Campbell (R-Irvine) began posting on the FlashReport.org Website, California's most prominent political website, as a regular "blogger." Campbell will be taking on the role as the "Beltway Correspondent." "I'm excited about this opportunity to contribute to t...

Washington, DC - Today, U.S. Rep. John Campbell (R-Irvine) began posting on the FlashReport.org Website, California's most prominent political website, as a regular "blogger." Campbell will be taking on the role as the "Beltway Correspondent."

"I'm excited about this opportunity to contribute to the FlashReport. Blogs are changing the way Americans get their news, and this is a great opportunity to use a new technology to help readers in California stay informed about what is happening in Washington," said Campbell.

The FlashReport has over 12,000 daily visitors. The site allows readers to stay updated on the latest political news in California and read commentary from numerous well informed sources that write on its blog each day.

In a release today announcing Campbell's new role on the site, FlashReport creator and publisher Jon Fleischman said, "We are extremely excited to have someone of the caliber of Congressman Campbell joining our team. Campbell will bring to the site the gravitas of a respected Member of Congress, who is highly regarded for his policy acumen and his political savvy."

Campbell plans to make regular posts the site. Readers interested in following his blog can find it at: <http://www.flashreport.org/blog>